When she was two, the king and queen decided to move to the neighboring kingdom of Huntington. Here the little girl continued to grow, and the people of her kingdom knew she could always be found either reading a book, playing with woodland creatures, or riding her beloved horses. In time, the princess was blessed with a sister, an experience that led her to discover her love of children and a desire to teach. So that little girl, who wasn't so little anymore, set off on a new journey to the faraway kingdom of Geneseo, where she made many new friends and learned many new things. parents who nurtured his kindness, charisma, and strength. Though a little cautious, the boy loved adventure and thrived on competition. Whether it was amongst family, friends, or on a team, he grew to have an incredible drive to win. The force would ultimately lead him to apply to the kingdom of Geneseo where he would really develop his skills and train to become a brave and honorable knight. Introduced by mutual friends, the pair seemed an unlikely couple. Though the princess was hesitant at first to let the brave knight into her heart, the knight was determined to make her part of his world and therefore unsheathed his secret weapon: their shared love for fairytales. Of course, the princess couldn't resist the knight's invitation to watch Aladdin!
